

Prevent Losing Your Dog in a Disaster

The best way to mitigate disasters for pets is to avoid the disaster in the first place. With unfamiliar sounds, smells, and sights that follow a disaster, pets can easily become confused and get lost.

Dogs should wear appropriate identification at all times. An example of appropriate identification is a tag with your name, address, and phone number. More permanent methods include microchips, freeze marking, and tattoos. These are most useful if the information on them is registered at a national registry.
