

Prioritization of Animals

A sad but real side of emergency evacuation and rescue is the need to prioritize which animals to save first. This is particularly important for large breeding and stable operations, racetracks, and rare breed farms, where it might not be possible to evacuate or save all animals after a sudden impact incident.

Every farm owner and stable manager should prioritize clearly which animals will be protected first in a sudden disaster incident, such as a fire, tornado, flash flood, or power outage. This allows a rational approach to rescue in an emergency.